The Practical Implications of e-transformation

Wednesday 15th October 2003

The technology may be sexy, the potential apparently unlimited, the business case compelling ... what's it really like though? Explore the single big idea at the heart of the e-revolution; applying "internet thinking" to non e-business; creating an organisation's 'Digital Nervous System'; structuring an e-transformation programme.

Building a Corporate Culture

Thursday 29th January 2004

We tend to believe that our corporate culture has been built up over years, much like a character – and takes a lifetime to change. This seminar explains the importance of producing the 'right' culture that fits with values and ways of operating; diagnosing the current culture, why it is what it is and how to influence the 'way we want it to be'.

Surviving Mergers and Acquisitions

Thursday 6th April 2004

It is hard nowadays to find a company that hasn't been involved in a merger or acquisition. But most 'fail' in achieving their short term growth. Why? This seminar explores some of the tactics used to set up firmer foundations for success and for managing the biggest risk through any 'change' process – the people!

Managing in the Global Revolution

Thursday 17th June 2004

Globalisation remains a key business issue as mergers, acquisitions and new technologies force companies to compete in the new global marketplace. This seminar provides an insight into the impact of globalisation on business organisations and how to adopt a strategic managerial approach to global issues, such as legal, economic and cultural differences
